Each new school year, this old campus quiz comes back into feeds. Several things explain why it keeps returning.

It takes five minutes

You can finish it in about five minutes, which is perfect for short videos and late-night conversations.

It breaks the ice

Comparing scores is personal enough to read more be interesting without revealing details, as long as people share scores and not answers.

It is a tradition

The test dates back to orientation week at Rice University, so taking it feels like being part of a long-running tradition.

If you try it, keep it light: share only your number, let anyone opt out, and remember the number says nothing about character.
