

During the COVID-19 period, LVL Music Academy rapidly expanded its online lesson offering, and this digital capability has remained an established part of the academy's programme. Students who cannot attend the studio in person, whether due to illness, travel, or scheduling constraints, can continue their lessons via Zoom, FaceTime, WhatsApp Video, or other platforms that the LVL teaching team is experienced in using. For students who are purchasing a violin from LVL's shop but who will be taking lessons online rather than in person, the quality of the instrument and its set-up is even more important. In an online lesson, the teacher's ability to hear and assess the student's tone is limited by the technology, making it essential that the instrument produces the best possible sound from the outset. Alan Senejani's careful set-up of every instrument sold through the <https://www.mediafire.com/file/fba4r6rz912r1sr/pdf-32023-69552.pdf/file> shop ensures that online students start with the best possible acoustic foundation. LVL's experience with online teaching since 2019 means the team is well placed to advise students and families on how to set up a home practice environment that makes the most of remote lessons, including microphone placement, camera angles, and acoustics.
