What Are Repetitive Strain Injuries?

Repetitive strain injuries encompass a range of conditions that arise from repetitive motion or sustained awkward positions over time. Conditions such as carpal tunnel syndrome, tendonitis, and bursitis are common examples of RSIs. They can cause pain, numbness, swelling, and even loss of function in the affected areas.

Signs and Symptoms of RSIs

Identifying RSIs early is critical for effective management and recovery. Some signs include:

- Persistent pain in joints or muscles
- Numbness or tingling sensations
- Weakness in hands or arms
- Swelling or inflammation

If you're experiencing any of these symptoms, it's essential to consult with a healthcare professional right away.
