Simply use white paper towels and water. Simple huh?However, maybe that simple method isn't enough to remove the offensive stain. Worry not; there are still many more tricks in the bag. For example, you can try using commercial stain removers. These are easily available online. Resist the temptation to buying one of those detergents that claim to remove any type of stain. Look for commercial cleaners that are safe to use on your specific type of carpet. You wouldn't want to get rid of the stain only to Boyd Law Firm family law discover you've discolored the carpet's fabric. Surprisingly, using nothing more than dishwasher detergent mixed with water works astonishingly well for most cases.Before you even think about scrubbing of the stain do some testing first. Do this no matter what type of cleaner you are planning to use. You should always start by applying the liquid to a small sample on your carpet. If you notice that the substance damages the carpet in any way immediately stop using it. Then blot it out with water. If your product works, then follow the given instructions. It's important that you don't try to scrub out the stain. Doing so will only spread it around. Instead soak some towels with your product and gently use them to blot up the stain. Repeat this several times until the mark is completely or partially gone. When you are satisfied with your results quickly dry the affected area. This prevents any deep stains from surfacing up.
